Mustafa discusses meeting with Kurti and proposes VV-PDK formula for president

The meeting between Democratic Party of Kosovo MP Rustem Mustafa and Prime Minister and Vetëvendosje Movement leader Albin Kurti has prompted discussion about a new scenario in Kosovo politics.

Mustafa said that he met with Kurti in recent days and held a lengthy discussion with him about the platform he has proposed to overcome the institutional deadlock.

According to the PDK lawmaker, the meeting explored the possibility of cooperation among Vetëvendosje, PDK and MPs representing non-majority communities.

Mustafa has called this model of cooperation a "Coalition for Normality." According to his reasoning, bringing together the two largest parties and community representatives would secure the votes needed to resolve the institutional issues that remain outstanding.

Mustafa's proposal for the distribution of positions envisages PDK taking the presidency of Kosovo, while Vetëvendosje would continue to lead the government and parliament.

The MP claims that the idea was presented and began to be considered during his meeting with Kurti, and he expects discussions to continue in the coming days.

However, this platform is Mustafa's own initiative and political position. As of the publication of this report, the leaderships of Vetëvendosje and PDK had not confirmed that they had begun official negotiations to form a joint coalition.

Mustafa believes that reaching an agreement between VV and PDK would guarantee political stability for the country, avoiding another electoral process.

His initiative comes as PDK, in its official position, continues to act as an opposition force and oppose the Kurti

The media's series of reports on the current political situation in Kosovo has led to an unprecedented level of support for the current government.

The party has referred the issue concerning the constitution of parliament to the Constitutional Court. PDK has also announced that it will challenge the procedure through which the Kurti 4 government was elected.

Consequently, there remains a clear distinction between the party's official line and Mustafa's political initiative.

At the same time, Kosovo continues to face uncertainty over the election of the president. The head of state must be elected by a qualified majority in parliament, while the failure of this process could lead the country into another political crisis and early elections.

Under these circumstances, the conversation between Mustafa and Kurti could be interpreted as an attempt to test a new model of cooperation. Nevertheless, without the participation and consent of PDK's leadership, the meeting cannot be described as the beginning of an official agreement between the two political parties.
