Deputy Assistant Secretary Daniel Lawton's Remarks to the House Foreign Affairs Committee Subcommittee on Europe, September 15, 2026

Chairman Self, Ranking Member Keating, distinguished Members of the Subcommittee on Europe, thank you for the opportunity to testify today on U.S. policy in the Western Balkans. This is an important region for U.S. interests, and we appreciate congressional attention and visits to the region, including Chairman Self's most recent visit in May. The United States seeks a stable, peaceful, and prosperous Western Balkans that contributes to regional and global security. We are pursuing positive relations with key actors in the region to maintain stability, expand economic cooperation, and counter threats that directly affect the United States. Last year, at the thirtieth anniversary commemoration of the Dayton Peace Agreement, Deputy Secretary Landau made clear that the era of externally imposed nation-building is over. As the Deputy Secretary noted, "The United States is not offering unlimited means for undefined, uncertain, and unrealistic ends." Instead, we are urging local leaders to forge local solutions to local problems. We want leaders across the region to move beyond relitigating past disputes and focus instead on pragmatic initiatives that move their countries forward. This does not mean disengagement. The U.S. remains active in pursuing constructive outcomes that advance our interests and facilitate local actors in pursuing those local solutions. We remain ready to work with those prepared to move into the future, but have little interest in those who would undermine stability for selfish purposes, or who relitigate decades-old grievances. U.S. policy rests on three pillars. The first is maintaining stability, a prerequisite for all our objectives. Second, we are advancing U.S. economic and commercial interests through private-sector-led growth and investment climates that welcome American business. We see these two pillars—stability and prosperity—as mutually reinforcing. Third, we are working with our partners to counter threats, including from Balkan transnational criminal organizations that directly cooperate with Western Hemisphere cartels that threaten the United States. We pursue these objectives through sustained, high-level engagement and the use of all the tools at our disposal. Actors realize we have these additional tools enacted by Congress at our disposal. We also expect European partners to carry a greater share of the region's security burden. For our Western Balkan NATO allies, this includes by modernizing their militaries and meeting NATO defense spending commitments to achieve the 2% target. Balkan and Albanian leaders have agreed to the 3% target. The United States remains committed to Bosnia and Herzegovina's sovereignty and territorial integrity and to the stability brought by the Dayton Agreement. We will continue to work with our partners to ensure the country's legal cohesion and territorial integrity, preserving the country's legal cohesion and territorial integrity, while securing the withdrawal of the Republika Srpska's most anti-Dayton legislation. Reduced tensions created space for progress on the Southern Interconnection gas pipeline with Croatia, which will diversify Bosnia's energy supply. The United States will also promote economic growth while creating opportunities for U.S. companies. Next month, the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina will cast their ballots in elections, and we stand ready to work the new leadership into our bilateral relations. Similarly, the United States remains committed to Kosovo's independence and territorial integrity. We encourage broad collaboration agreements with Kosovo, which unfortunately have been hindered by repeated elections. We also encourage the timely implementation and the delayed formation of the institutions required to advance our shared priorities. We have urged Kosovo's leaders to bring this process to conclusion in accordance with the Constitution and the law. We remain the sincere friend and partner of Kosovo's people.

All of Kosovo's citizens should enjoy equal right and protection of the law if Kosovo is to preserve stability. The NATO Force in Kosovo will continue to maintain a safe and secure environment in Kosovo and is supported by U.S. force contributions. In Serbia, we are advocating for the United States as the partner of choice to counter adversarial influence. Our efforts are working, and our bilateral partnership is getting stronger. In July, we hosted the first-ever U.S.-Serbia Strategic Dialogue advancing energy, defense, security, and commercial cooperation. Engagement with this pivotal country in the regional balance will remain critical to safeguarding U.S. interests. Normalization of relations, and the maintenance of peace, between Serbia and Kosovo is essential to regional stability. Significant progress has occurred since the 2020 Washington Agreement, which President Trump brokered during his first term. Nevertheless, the EU-facilitated Dialogue has stalled because of insufficient political will on both sides. We continue to urge both sides to work closely with our NATO ally Albania to dismantle transnational criminal organizations and expand market access for U.S. companies. A recently finalized Foreign Military Financing loan will help Albania meet its defense spending commitments and increase the sale of U.S.-made equipment. North Macedonia and Montenegro are both close NATO allies and security partners, each advancing strategic priorities and key projects that improve regional connectivity. North Macedonia is on a credible path to meet its NATO defense spending commitment. Just announced, the $1 billion Serbian-American Joint Roads project will develop north-south and east-west transportation infrastructure projects. -North Macedonia Strategic Dialogue held in April reaffirmed both countries' commitment to working together to advance these strategic lines of effort. Similarly, the recently concluded U.S.-Montenegro Intergovernmental Agreement locks in a framework for cooperation, including on the Adriatic-Ionian corridor. These projects are vital to regional connectivity and expanding opportunities for U.S. companies in the region. Our engagements in the Western Balkans are tied to achievable objectives and measurable results. Our focus is on supporting pragmatic, locally driven solutions, expanding economic and security cooperation, and advancing American interests. Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.
